

8 getaways we wish we could afford

By Katia Hetter, CNN

updated 8:12 AM EST, Tue January 8, 2013

(CNN) -- Imagine kicking back on a private island in the Bahamas where the staff caters to your every whim. Yes, it's a pipe dream for 99% of us, but let's imagine. Put that bank balance out of your mind. Now conjure up a snorkel and flippers. To find some of the most out-of-this-world destinations for jet-setters in 2013, CNN.com asked Robb Report editorial director Bruce Wallin for ideas.

So keep this list handy in case of a fat financial windfall:

Dorado Beach, a Ritz-Carlton Reserve, Puerto Rico

The Dorado Beach, a Ritz-Carlton Reserve, isn't a newcomer to Puerto Rico. The resort, which opened its doors on December 12, is on the site of Laurance Rockefeller's former estate near San Juan. The property continued his environmental legacy by setting aside some 75% of its 1,400 acres as green space.

All 100 guestrooms and 14 one-bedroom suites are on the beach.

"Su Casa," a restored four-bedroom beachfront villa, was the original hacienda. Restaurant and beachfront dining feature the talents of acclaimed chef Jose Andres. The spa offers a tree-house option for massages.

Rates start at $1,499 a night based on double occupancy.

